Today will begin with rain moving thru the area and maybe a few rumbles of thunder. Conditions will improve this afternoon as skies clear and temperatures warm into the 60s.

Hazardous Weather

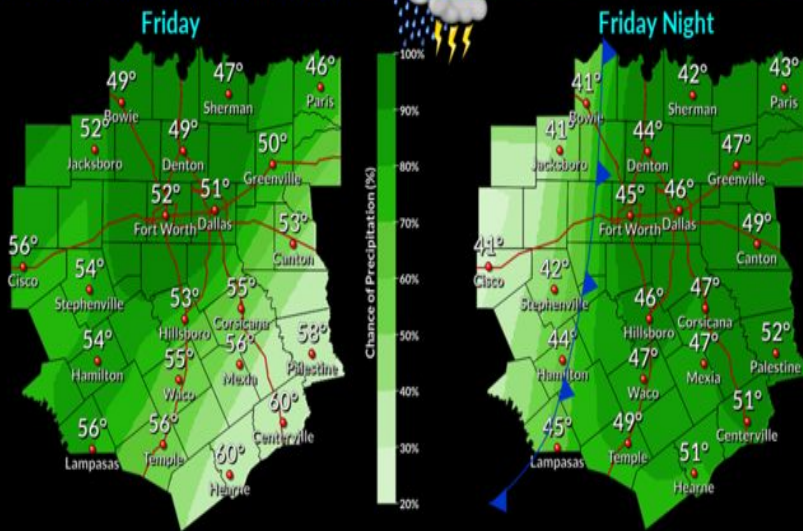

A Cool and Rainy Friday and Friday Night

Weather Forecast Office
Fort Worth, TX

Isolated Thunderstorms Possible Friday Night

Issued January 11, 2019 4:56 AM CT

- Widespread rainfall with a few embedded, rumbles of thunder is expected.
- Accumulations less than an inch are expected, but isolated higher amounts are possible.
- Most rainfall will likely convert to runoff due to saturated soils. This may result in some rises of rivers, creeks, and streams, as well as brief, minor flooding of typical low-lying areas.
- Highs and lows remain in the 40s and 50s.

f t v NWSFortWorth

weather.gov/fortworth

Numerous showers with a few embedded, rumbles of thunder are expected across the entire area through tonight, though a gradual west to east end is expected across the western half of the region after midnight Saturday. Total rainfall amounts will be generally less than 1 inch, but isolated higher amounts are possible and could result in run-off due to saturated soils. Any localized, higher amounts would likely result in minor rises on rivers, creeks, and streams, as well as brief, minor flooding of typical low-lying areas. Otherwise, cool temperatures will continue with highs in the 50s south, and the mid-upper 40s north. Low Friday night will be mainly in the 40s.

Rain Chances Tonight

Weather Forecast Office
Houston/Galveston, TX

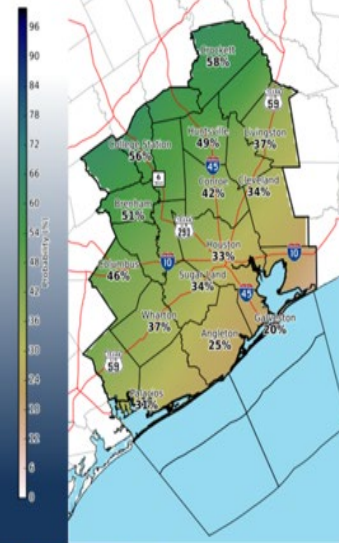

A cold front moving through the region Saturday morning will bring rain.

Issued January 11, 2019 7:20 AM CT

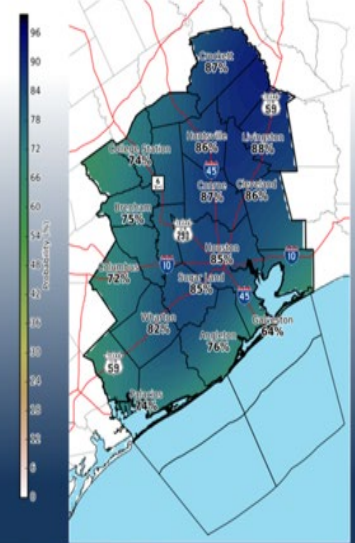

- Rain chances increase through the overnight hours.
- Showers will be the main form of rain but scattered thunderstorms will be possible.
